

77% Say Health Care is an Important Influence on Presidential Vote -- Insure.com Survey

October 21, 2020

Reducing health insurance costs appears critical to 35% of respondents

FOSTER CITY, Calif., Oct. 21, 2020 /PRNewswire/ -- Insure.com announces survey results from 1,000 people who answered questions about politics and health care. More than three-quarters of respondents view health care as an important election year issue. Reducing health insurance costs is the top issue, according to survey participants.

Here's the break down by political party:

Democrats

- Reduce health insurance costs—26%
- Strengthen/protect the Affordable Care Act—22%
- Medicare for all—21%

Republicans

- Reduce health insurance costs—42%
- Repeal the Affordable Care Act -- 20%
- Improve health care quality—18%

Independents

- Reduce health insurance costs—40%
- Medicare for all—16%
- Access to health insurance—13%

More than half of respondents reported dissatisfaction with the American health care system, including slightly more than half of Democrats and Independents and 43% of Republicans.

What improvements would people like to see in the health care system? Those surveyed indicate the following reform preferences:

- A public option for people who want it, while preserving employer-sponsored health insurance—25%
- Medicare for all—19%
- Eliminate surprise medical bills—13%
- Government subsidies to help lower health insurance costs—12%
- Fewer regulations on health insurers—9%
- Expand Medicaid eligibility, so more people have access to a Medicaid plan—7%
- Lower the Medicare age so more people can sign up for that coverage—5%
- Raise Medicare and Medicaid payments to doctors—2%

A public option was the top health care reform backed by Democrats, Republicans and Independents in the survey. Participants identified as:

- Democrats—37%
- Republicans—36%
- Independents—25%
